Dr. Marshall Fagin
Prosthodontist

Q: Should I see a prosthodontist for my dental implants?

A: Prosthodontists are on the cutting edge of many technological procedures, several of which were pioneered by Prosthodontists. Although some general dentists may restore single implants, the more complex cases with several teeth being replaced are often referred to the Prosthodontist, a specialist whose field includes the restoration of dental implants. They can best determine your treatment options as a team with Oral Surgeons or Periodontist. Having been restoring and teaching dental implants for over 30 years, I have encouraged patients to consider this technology, not only because of my high long-term predictable success with them, but also for avoiding cutting down good teeth to hold fixed bridges, decreasing decay potential on adjacent teeth, and avoiding removable appliances. With complete denture patients it is very rewarding to restore their quality of life using implants to support and retain dentures or replace them with fixed non-removable bridges.
